

Privacy & Policy

The HIPPA Privacy Rule protects the privacy of each client. Authorization must be given in the form of a signature by the client before information can be shared. Anything talked about in a session is to be kept confidential.

There are certain circumstances where health information must be shared by law. These exceptions may include:

- Threatening and intending self-harm
- Threatening to commit violence by putting another person's life in serious danger
- Suspected child, adult or elder abuse
